

Predicate Adjectives

Predicate adjectives defines the general subject of a sentence. This kind of semantic word is normally used after the subject of the sentence, which is a pronoun or noun. The descriptive word is also linked to any sentence that contains a link in its content. The linking verb functions to connect any verb with a descriptive name, word or pronoun.

Why Predicate Adjectives Matters?

Predicate adjectives are important for two different reasons. These;

The envelope is not used where adjective is required.

A linking verb should only be completed with a predicate adjective or predicate candidate (ie a pronoun or noun). It can never be completed by an envelope. For example;

- Your dinner tastes badly. (False)

(The word “tastes” functions as a linking verb. “Badly” functions as an envelope that cannot be used to complete a linking verb in general.)

- Your dinner tastes bad. (True)
